Alternative Investment Impact: The Joyner Family

Travis and Bridget Joyner have discovered the multiplying impact of sowing their time, talents, and relationships—not just their money—into the causes they care about most.

As entrepreneurs and investors, they wondered: How could we take our charitable dollars and multiply them so they last for years? How could we seed new nonprofit initiatives that struggle to attract traditional charitable capital?

Alternative investments in a donor advised fund at The Signatry have unlocked these kinds of opportunities. The Joyners have united their charitable giving with their business and investing experience to pursue strategic kingdom impact beyond traditional categories.

"The way I look at alternative investing, there are two buckets," Travis told us. "The first is where I'm recommending investing in a for-profit enterprise that does an underlying good. The second is where I'm recommending supporting a nonprofit initiative that would have a hard time attracting traditional nonprofit capital."

The flexibility and creativity of alternative investments have infused more joy—and greater impact—into the Joyners' generosity journey.

Travis added, "Alternative investments are really creating pathways to give in unique ways, in ways where you're getting an outsized return on investment."
